APPRECIATION OF EXCELLENCE. Books which are immediately successful are those which catch and reflect the passing tones of opinion-all-absorbing while they last, but from their nature subject to change, The mass of men know little of other times or other ways of thinking than their own Their minds are formed by the conditions of the present hour. Their greatest man is he who for the moment expresses most completely their own sentiments, and represents human life to them from their own point of To relieve their embarrassment one of the view. To the many they seem figvoriess and coloriess, deficient in all the qualities which for the noment are most admired. They pass unnoticed amid the meteors by which they are surrounded and eclipsed. But the meteors pass and they remain, and are seen gradually to be no vanishing coruscations, but new fixed stars, sources of genuine light, shining serenely forever in the intellectual sky. They ink the ages one to another in a common humanity. Virgil and Horace lived nearly 2,000 years ago, and belonged to a society of utterly perished. But Virgil and Horace de not grow old, because while society changes men continue, and we recognize in reading them that the same heart beat under the togs which we feel in our own breasts. In the Roman Empire, too, there were contempor ary popularities; men who were worshiped as gods, whose lightest word was treasured as a pregions jewel-on whose breath millions hung expectant, who had temples built in their honor, who in their day were a power in the world, 'these are gone, to claim it. The servent found her about to quit the room with the three gold coins in her hand. She said to the servant "I am going to carry them back to you." Nevertheless she was carried to the Commissioner of Poice, and he ordered her to be sent to the Police Court for trial. She was too poor engage a lawyer, and when asked by udge what she had to say for herself, sh replied : "The day I went to my employer's carried my child with me. It was in my arms, as it is now I wasn't paying attention to it. There were several gold coins on the mantle-piece, and unknown to me, it stretch ed out its little hard and seized three pieces, which I did not observe until I got home." I at once put on my bonnet, and was going back to my employer to return them, when

The court could not believe the story -They upbraided the mother for her impudence in endeavoring to palm off such a manifest lie for the truth. They besought her, for her own sake, to retract so absurd a tale, for it could have no effect but to oblige the court to sentence her to a runch severer punishment than they were disposed to inflict upon one so young and evidently so deep

These appeals had no effect, except strengthen the poor mother's' pertinacions adherence to her original story. As this firmness was sustained by that look of innocence which the most advoit criminal can never counterfeit, the court was at some loss to discover what decision justice demanded.
